Helen Johnston believes that if she'd been born as anything other than a black girl in the south, she would have been a mockingbird. Helen and her two sisters are children of parents who've spent their lives farming cotton. When the cotton industry changes, the family seeks a new start in the city. Life lessons from school and home revolve around honesty, dependability, and education. Helen is also inspired by her mother's childhood stories. Facing tragedies and desertions, Helen makes promises to help her cope with reality. Family and friends are strong and positive influences in helping her regain control. Her singing and music abilities become an important bridge toward accomplishing her goals. You'll find Helen, teaching and helping to solve a mystery, in DENIAL.
