When violence towards women is increasing in the headlines, our knowledge, attitude and how we respond when women of domestic violence reach for help, is imperative to life and death. Domestic violence leading to death and injury is on the rise, with now up to two women murdered each week.

Even though men and women do not assault each other at equal rates or with equal effects, and the majority of perpetrators of violence are men, one in three victims of sexual assault and family violence and abuse are male. A vast majority of perpetrators of intimate partner violence against male victims are females.

Family violence is a series problem in Australia with significant impact upon the lives on men, women and children. It does not discriminate. Gender, geographic location, socio- economic status, age, sexual preference, culture, race, and religion makes no difference.

Intimate partner violence, ( IPV), also known as domestic violence between partners, wives, husbands, boyfriends, girlfriends, and violence between siblings, and other family members, elderly abuse, sexual abuse and child abuse are all different forms of family violence. Even though family violence against women and children is receiving government and media recognition, male victims of domestic violence, even though it is in its early stages, are yet to also receive that same acknowledgement.

Domestic violence is inconsistent, it can come in many forms of physical, sexual, threatening or emotional abuse, somewhat the abuser reaches a point of climax from frightening, intimidating and controlling their victim, each time each incident becoming more escalated and heightened. A mix of emotional behaviours to control the abused ensuring their victim is afraid and controlled, shouting, throwing items and threatening makes their victims believe that it is their reflective behavior, that is making their abuser be this way. An increase of power continues to strengthen in the abuser, whilst the victim becomes deeper into a loss of power, courage and no voice. A silence deepens and most times it's only after it's too late do we hear the voice for help.

NO LONGER A SHADOW - When to walk away from domestic violence is a book written in support for victims of domestic violence with an Action Plan for how to leave the abuser, what to ask your lawyer, details on the mediation process as well as resources for support. We need to support each other, support our victims, and even our abusers as we fight back against domestic violence.
