The Club of Queer Trades

What is the point of rescuing a lady from her kidnappers if she refuses to be rescued? The answer leads to the mystery of The Club of Queer Trades. "Cherub" Swinburne and his friends use their best sleuthing efforts to understand The Club of Queer Trades -- a club that demands its members earn their living in odd and unusual ways. This is Edwardian detective work at its finest, with Chesterton's wit and style making each of the six tales within the book a delight to read.

The Napoleon of Notting Hill

Auberon Quin insists that elaborate costumes must be worn by the provosts of London's districts. One young man takes the declaration seriously however – Adam Wayne, the Napoleon of Notting Hill.

The Man Who Was Thursday (1908)

Gabriel Syme is an anti-anarchist police corps spy and meets seven men -- each named after a day of the week. Thursday is soon to be elected.

About The Author

English writer Gilbert Keith Chesterton (1874–1936) was a philosopher, journalist, literary critic, and sometimes called "prince of paradox." Biographers have called him a successor to Victorian authors including Thomas Carlyle and John Ruskin. Chesterton is well known for his priest-detective Father Brown. Time magazine had this to say about the British author: "Whenever possible Chesterton made his points with popular sayings, proverbs, allegories—first carefully turning them inside out."
