Body Language: First Impressions may well be the finest book on Body Language on the market. Its sales attest to its success. When a stranger meets a stranger, the first impression is formed -- without words. Since 65%-95% of all effective information is obtained through Body Language, learning how to make a successful first impression is critical.

This book has had seven printings, has been sold at seminars for the CIA, Federal government of Canada, Public Procurement officers in seven states, General Dynamics, Lockheed-Martin, Mystery Writers of America, Johns Hopkins University, and National Institute of Governmental Purchasing -- just to name a few. It has served as a testbook for classes such as California State University, Los Angeles, California State Polytechnic University, Pomona, Northern Virginia Community Colleges, and Ball State.

No doubt about it -- the book is a winner and like the Energizer Bunny, just keep forging ahead. Written in laymen's terms (some say it reads just as though the author is speaking), all types of professions have studied it-- police, health care staffs, school personnel, military groups, business and corporation staffs, and civic organizations.

Some areas of concentration in the book are nonverbal variables that cover color, gender, size and shape, facial expression, eye behavior, the mouth, gestures, leakages (clues to deceptive behavior), posture, territoriality, usage of space, smell, and etiquette.

Whoever you are, whatever you do, the study of this book can change not only your life but the way you see the world. Most importantly, you will learn about your own fascinating communication system.
