In the past, people used to borrow money for their daily life from housing mortgage to car mortgage, from card debt to state debt until their credit bankruptcy. In the past, diligence is no never a virtue, and balance between budge is a life art vanished, the world lost into bottomless money hole never stored again. Linkage debt stimulates the collapse of the finance system and the financial tsunami is sweeping the global world. Under this circumstance, Margaret Atwood, the Canada national treasure writer, offers her genuine knowledge and judgement about the debt problem about our world. Atwood researches this topic from religion, culture and social structure over past and present. Her funny language is full of imagination and she revealed the truth of debt by simple word that debt is like air, which is always regarded as natural but we realize the existence until something happened. She reminds people that we shall return to nature after we enjoyed the resources for even our body are borrowed.
