The Whole Duty of Man With Private Devotions for Several Occasions, Ordinary and Extraordinary (Classic Reprint) Richard Allestree

This Carelessness of the Soul is the Root of all the Sin we commit; and therefore whosoever intends to set upon a Christian Course, must, in the first Place, amend that. To the doing whereof there needs no deep Learning, or extraordinary Parts; the simple Man living (that is not a natural Fool) hath understanding enough for it, if he will but add in this by the same Rules of common Reason whereby he proceeds in his worldly Business. I will therefore now briefly set down some of those Motives which use to stir up our Care of any outward Thing, and then apply them to the Soul. 4. There be four Things especially which use to awake our Care; the first is, the Worth of the Thing; secondly, the Usefulness of it to us, when we cannot part with it without great Damage and Mischief; the third, the great Danger of it; and the fourth, the Likelihood that our Care will not be in vain, but that it will preserve the Thing cared for. 5. For the first, we know our Care of any worldly thing is answerable to the Worth of it; and what is of greatest Price is most watchful to preserve, and most fearful to lose: No Man locks up Dung in his Chest, but his money, or what he counts precious, he doth. Now in this Respect the Soul deserves more Care, than all the Things in the World besides, for tis infinitely more worth; first, in that it is made after the Image of God; it was God that breathed into Man this Breath of Life, Gen. ii. 7. Now God being of the greatest Excellency, and Worth, the more any Thing is like him, the more it is to be valued. But tis sure that no Creature upon the Earth is at all like God, but the Soul of Man; and therefore nothing ought to have so much of our Care. Secondly, the Soul never dies. We use to prize Things according to their Durability: What is most lasting is most Worth. Now the Soul is a Thing that will last for ever; When Wealth,
